10. Not having a focused answer to the question of why you want to be a doctor. Telling a long narrative that doesn’t immediately answer the question. “When I was one, I liked to stare at medicine bottles... When I was two, I got a toy stethoscope... When I was three, I...”

9. Fear of being too personal. “I know you just asked me about the values I care about, but did I mention that I got a 39 on the MCAT and I was an officer of Club A, the captain of Team B and my GPA is 3.8?”

8. Being too casual or “chummy.” “Hey there, Jim, did you see the Red Sox game last night?”

7. Not being detailed enough when discussing your volunteer/clinical experiences. “Patients are just so wonderful. I love to help them.”

6. Not holding yourself accountable for your academic record. “That professor was impossible to get a good grade from.” Or, “I was so involved in my other activities, my schedule was just crazy!” (This error can sometimes apply your academic successes as well as failures).

5. Lack of enthusiasm for medicine. “I ruled out a business career after my internship last summer...” (Note: Lack of enthusiasm can also come into play when you’re pursuing medicine for someone else’s reasons, not your own).

4. Being unaware of, or unable to comment on, the down-sides of medicine. “Problems in healthcare? I guess it would be something about malpractice or insurance coverage, but I don’t really know. Isn’t medicine the noblest of professions?”

3. Being indifferent or ignorant about a particular school. “I’m really excited about the new trend toward problem-based learning in medical education... Oh, your pre-clinical years are taught in lecture format? Oh...”

2. Treating med students and administrative help differently than senior faculty. “When am I going to get to see the Dean?”

1. Not letting the interviewer lead the interview. (See # 9 above. Or, “Interesting question... That reminds me of something I wanted to talk about...so I’m sure you won’t mind if I change the subject...”

10 SUGGESTIONS FOR A SUCCESSFUL MED SCHOOL INTERVIEW

10. Prepare a succinct way of describing your interest and path toward applying to medical school. It might help to have a short version (under 5 mins) and a longer version to use only if your interviewer seems intrigued.

9. Reveal your personality, family background, interests, passions— your unique self.

8. Be appropriately professional. Remember, these people are not your colleagues.

7. Describe specific highlights of your volunteer and clinical experience. Provide examples, anecdotes, and illustrations.

6. Own your transcript. Think about what you’ve learned through your academic successes and failure, how you are a better student now than when you came to Princeton.

5. Express enthusiasm for the aspects of medicine most appealing to you.

4. Be aware of, and reasonably articulate about, current issues in healthcare.

3. Do your research about each school you visit.

2. Treat everyone you meet during the interview and application process with respect.

1. Allow yourself to be interviewed. Answer the questions you are asked, without pushing your own agenda. This gives you a chance to demonstrate your listening skills, flexibility, and knowledge without being arrogant, pushy, or rehearsed.

“It takes courage to grow up and become who you really are.”
