Three Things for '19s to do over Winter Break

- Tend to your current or future application to health professions school.
 - 2019 applicants: complete your Intake Form; work on your autobio, activities list and short essays.
 - Future applicants: read through the Application Process section of our website to get acquainted with some basics
 - Not sure which one you are? Spend time soul searching, chatting with friends who have applied and mentors in the field; read through the data available on Coursesites.
- Continue gaining perspective about your career of interest. Shadow local professionals, reach out to alums at medical schools near you over break (email us for contact information if desired). Reach out to admissions personnel in other careers—many are happy to talk with you directly about your candidacy.
- Borrow a medical memoir or two from our library (or buy one or download from your local library to e-read) to inspire you. A few ideas (with amazon e-book links):

Question of the Week: Physics & MCAT

Question: I am a sophomore on the wait list for PHY 108. I've finished my other prereqs including Biochem, and have AP credit for Physics. I was hoping to take the MCAT this summer – will I be at a disadvantage if I haven't taken PHY 108?

Answer: There isn't too much Physics that you'll need for MCAT relative to the other premed sciences (approximately 25% of one of the four sections), and you'll have gotten the foundation in AP courses. If you self-study using MCAT books, you'll be fine. Here's the MCAT content outline, for reference: https://aamc-orange.global.ssl.fastly.net/production/media/filter_public/3d/45/3d4d565ad-6605-4d1b-853e-309c96acb4c9/mcat-cp.pdf. We also have MCAT study books in our office if you'd like to read through the Physics content.

Keep in mind that Princeton students didn't have PHY 108 as an option until three years ago, and those with AP took courses like AST 204 or physical chemistry (or went back and took a physics sequence) still did fine on the MCAT! Also, only take the MCAT this summer if you truly feel ready for it. Even with a direct entry path, you could take MCAT as late as May of junior year and still know your score before you apply. Unlike the SAT, the expectation is that you study for and take the MCAT only once.
